exceptions in the whole territory of the internal market.

Still in copyright, a draft directive on collective management has been announced, which makes the EU lawmaker step into a new territory, formerly reserved to Member States, and orphan works has just been released.²⁸ For the latter, it is a real harmonization as the directive only provides a status of an orphan work granted in one Member State. The guidelines to carry out the diligent search of the right holder are considered as a preliminary step to acknowledge a work as orphan.

Patent has been the parent pauvre of the EU legislative efforts. There is no need to recall the unhappy saga of the community patent, still wishful thinking after more than 30 years of discussion. Besides, no directive has been adopted to harmonize the general rules of patent in the Member States. The only achieved action of the European Union in the patent arena has been to sustain the development of biotechnological inventions,²⁹ hereby enhancing a thriving new Europe. As a result, patent laws remain largely fragmented in the Member States, even though the rules of the EPO patent might have influenced them, all Member States being part of the Munich Convention.³⁰

At not least, the European Union has tried to better secure the enforcement of its intellectual property by enacting a horizontal directive dealing with enforcement and remedies in all intellectual property rights.³¹
